Maine Roads Take 18 Lives In May

Eighteen motor vehicle deaths during the month gave Maine one of its worst May records in history. Only twice before, in 1936 and in 1948, have so many people lost their lives in traffic accidents in May. Twenty-three were killed during the month in each of these years. The eighteen fatalities more than doubled the annual average of eight for the month for the previous three years, and it is exactly three times the total taken in 1951 when six were killed.

Four pedestrian deaths raised to seventeen the number of people killed walking this year. This compares with ten walking deaths for the same five-month period in 1951. Two of the four pedestrian fatalities in May of this year were three years old; another was six. All four were killed in urban sections. In addition to the four pedestrians—five drivers, seven passengers and two bicycle riders were included in the month's traffic toll.

May's staggering total brings to fifty the number of persons who have met death on Maine streets and highways since January 1, 1952. Fifty-three died during the same five-month period last year; forty-nine in 1950; and forty-three in 1949.

A head-on collision claimed the lives of three teen-age youngsters and gravely injured eight others. Another head-on collision resulted in a double fatality.

Sixteen people were killed during the last fifteen days of the month. Five died during the week end of May 17-18, and the long Memorial Day weekend accounted for six deaths.

Maine drivers had been doing a fine job for the past several months. However, improper driving and pedestrian practices took a heavy toll in lives the past month. Speed, passing on hills, running off the road, and children running across the road, were prominent among the causes of fatalities. The month of May shattered any illusions we may have been cherishing that we were going to improve materially our highway safety record. As a matter of fact, we shall be very fortunate if we do as well as we did last year.

Sixteen deaths in fifteen days during the latter part of May! This is a terrible price to pay for the privilege of automotive travel. Certainly, it should serve to awaken us all to the realization that highway danger is ever-present, and that tragedy may strike the moment we become indifferent or careless in our driving and walking. Constant alertness is a must. If we are to stay alive! Lt. John deWinter, Director, Division of Traffic and Safety.

The Week in Oxford County

Charles Foster of Oxford escaped injury when his car went over a thirty foot embankment into the outlet of Lake Penesseewassee recently. A fire hydrant was damaged and a utility pole broken in the plunge. Mr. Foster apparently fell asleep while driving.

George Breaux, 19, of Rumford, pleaded innocent to the arson charge of setting the fire which caused a $2,000 barn fire in West Peru. Probable cause was found by Judge Fred J. Hanson and Breaux was ordered held for the November term of Oxford Superior court in $3,500 bonds.

Two acres of woodland were burned over in the Chapel neighborhood, seven days ago, by a fire which consumed a quantity of pine, hemlock and spruce logs were destroyed.

A name entered in a pony naming contest by Alan Ayer, eight year old son of Dorothy Ayer Libby of Norway, wins him a real live pony. He has been notified by the Wells Lamont Corporation of Chicago, Ill.

'How Much Government?'

When the average American citizen goes to Washington as a tourist, he sees such sights as the beautiful Capitol building, the famous Washington Monument, and the shrines built to honor Lincoln, Jefferson, and others. He probably visits the Smithsonian National Museum and drives around in the Pentagon. On every side as he goes about Washington are the great masses of stone buildings which house the government bureaus and agencies.

Ever since citizens visiting the seat of our Federal Government, the seemingly endless blocks of huge office buildings create an impression of big and impersonal government. In fact the buildings in their massed effort, seem to rise to present a completely baffling appearance. A tourist from New York or Chicago, for instance, would be amazed to see these huge stone buildings in the District of Columbia with their central portions of every floor living in the same town.

Importance of Relaxing

WHILE SERVING in the army, Raymond P. Wilson, Muncie, Indiana, was transferred from Seattle, Washington, to Phoenix, Arizona. All his friends had shipped out to other sections, so he found himself all alone. Now for the first time in his life, he was going to have the opportunity to do the things that required solitude. But he found it terribly hard to avoid people, and he continued to have too many friends.

Carnegie

Up to the time of his discharge he still hadn't arrived at what he was seeking. He was wasting a lot of time. A year later he arrived at his goal. But it was like a raging fire he couldn't put out. He went into business for himself and began working day and night.

He got to the point where he was always in a hurry, and when he would meet friends, they could feel his great rush and went on. He would become bored with people and would pick out their faults and dwell on them.

At night he could worry about the problems of the morrow. Eventually he found himself unable to concentrate, or to think clearly. His mind seemed to be behind him in everything he did.

Finally, he took a firm hold on himself, gave himself a good talking to and began reading everything he could get his hands on that would help his situation. One day he read an article about relaxing; he began practicing. While lying in bed at night he would start at the top of his head and relax every single part of his body, down to and including his toes. Also, closing his eyes tightly he imagined he could see nothing but black, to help him relax.

Next he took a course in public speaking and found to his surprise that it emphasized the importance of making friends, and that he had an asset he hadn't valued.

GRASS ROOTS OPINION

Wadena, Minn., Pioneer Journal: "American visitors to Canada are looking at their dollar in worth 97 or 98 cents in Canadian money, whereas the Canadian dollar is now quoted at 102 cents, thus we are reflected in cold figures what happens to the currency of a country that goes to for socialism and internationalism such as we have been witnessing since the early days of the New Deal. The same thing happened over in England."

Alma, Mich., Record: "In 1923 Americans began working for them. By 1928 the date had been advanced to March 27. In 1931 it was even later, April 23. May 1932 it has been pushed up to May 19. Now before have Americans had to work so long to pay their taxes that of each hour worked, 20 cents pay is taken by the government to direct and hidden taxes."

Petaluma, Calif., Argonaut: "The break in the attempt to build back inflation has been made, under government auspices. The government, which is supposed to represent the public, has been favoring one section of that public. And in the end the whole public pays."

Liberal, Kansas, Southwest Daily Times: "Prevention of floods in Western Kansas can best be obtained by the water-based control plan through the construction of small dams, levees and soil conservation measures."

Governor Arn hit the nail on the head when he said: "You don't have to be an engineer to know it wouldn't be practical to build high all-purpose dams on the flat plains of Kansas."

"It is at this time, it seems to us, for our defense money to buy some real tangible defense for this country."

Fortland, Maine, Express: "If management or labor or both look to the government to solve their problems or seek the artificial method of legislation for settlement they will be letting some of the most important freedoms slip from their hands."

TROUBLES OF A COON HUNTER

"I REMEMBER"

BY THE OLDTIMERS

From E. E. Meredith, Fairmont, W. Va.: I remember when every family had a newspaper wall pocket made of pine cones and varnished.

From Mary Karch, Lakeview, Ohio: I remember the old grindstone out in the corner of the yard by the old-fashioned yellow rose bush. Father sharpened all the farm tools on it. I had to turn it and he would order me to pour on more water and urge me to turn with greater speed. All he did was hear down with all his might.

From the Old Cuss, Chicago: I remember how I used to get tired seeing "Uncle Tom's Cabin" on the stage. Every year it came around the country and everybody just had to go see it. I'd say every year never age—but always my girl would say I never seen it and would invite me into going. (You see, I had a different girl every year.)

From Alfred Alsworth, Dallas: One of my father's prized possessions was a ticket of admission to the impeachment of President Andrew Johnson. He attended the trial, and how he got in without handing over his ticket, I'll never know, but he still had it. This ticket read: "U. S. Senate, Impeachment of the President, Admitt the barer, March 13, 1868, Geo. T. Brown, Sergeant-at-Arms." They would probably have it on television now.

From Drake Dodson, Chicago: I hope the Old Cuss, who is always sending in those reproachful remembrances, reads this. He wasn't the only guy of the 20's. A friend and I attended the Silver Anniversary of the Morticians and Embalmers' convention here in 1922, and we all became "embalmed." We just poured the drinks into the coffin, and went about our business.

Ideas from other editors

Although Memorial Day is past, the entire column this week is given to an editorial entitled, "Country Cemetery on Memorial Day." The editorial is an example of the fine writing that often comes from the pens of the nation's country editors.

"Too far to walk, the heavy boots of armed men descend from autos pulled beneath the shading trees. The cemetery, dark, about the wooden church, stands hill-top high above the rolling meadow-land. And, out from town, the neighbors come by car, drawn here this slow Memorial Day with one accord to honor sons. The crisp grass, newly cut this morning by the deacons, cushions the gentle tread of these returned these few sparse moments.

"The color-guard pulls straps, and blinding belts, bring the Post's new polished guns to shoulder. From the thin line of hedge that holds the meadow from the citadel of shade, they move centrally, a vortex of khaki and white helmets, clamping in self-conscious ranks toward the Soldiers' Plot. The bugler slyly purses lip and touches horn to mouth in expectation.

"Small boys whisper among the tolling mounds and low-heads dilly, quizzically, the rain-washed ancient stones. Their voices hushed with awe waiting for the final punctuation of the service, they only hope to catch the spent brass casing from the guns, but know, without that something here is done great for them to comprehend.

"The sergeant barks a half-order, the order and the straggling line of men wavers to a halt, lined up along the open hollow of the Plot, to wait the next year cut.

"The preacher brings voice to halt, and the honey-bee sunbeams calling a draw. The soldier's straighten slightly the small to split grass blades from grass stained teeth, and crouch and bow. The order given, the guns point toward the sky and the scattered lay echoes and echoes out over the wavering earthline. The bugler chatters the first chord of T. and then, assured of noble end, sweetly sighs the rest.

"And the cardinals tear the silence with their clasp, and brush the solitude before doing. The last blue-boxed armistice gasoline dispenser, and the pointed order and the straggling line of men wavers to a halt, lined up along the open hollow of the Plot, to wait the next year cut.

"The preacher brings voice to halt, and the honey-bee sunbeams calling a draw. The soldier's straighten slightly the small to split grass blades from grass stained teeth, and crouch and bow. Above the Earth. For the first five to ten miles, temperature decreases, it is about 3 degrees below zero, Fahrenheit. It goes up, reaching 170 degrees at 50 miles altitude, but goes again, to about minus 20 degrees at 80 miles. Still higher, the temperature goes up again, until it is about 200 degrees at a height of 100 miles. However, the air is so exceedingly rarefied at this altitude that it is not really "hot" in the same sense as the air is hot to us at ground level. The temperature refers to the speed with which the few molecules present are moving. These would have very little effect on a thermometer, and reading would be determined only by the radiation it absorbed from the sun.

Avocado halves make a pretty salad when they're sprinkled with lemon juice to keep them from darkening. Fill with fresh pineapple cubes and whole bright strawberries which have been hulled. Pass French dressing and tiny baking powder biscuits.

Here's a delicious dessert: make a graham cracker shell, bake and cool. Fill with hard ice cream, cover with buttercream sauce and sprinkle with chopped walnuts.

Here's a good sandwich to serve with fruit salads for hot weather luncheon: soften cream cheese with orange juice to spreading consistency, then stir in 1/2 cup chopped, roasted almonds and spread on thick slices of fruit and bread.

GRASS ROOTS OPINION
Flashlight, Ohio, Home News Record. "We believe the trend of our government in recent years has been definitely toward socialism and we view this with alarm."

The prospect of socialism is frightening. The reason for this is quite simple—the past history of the results of socialism."

Brownville, Pa., Telegraph. "Freedom automatically entails responsibility. One of the chief marks of the slave is that he does not need to be responsible because he has lost his authority over his own actions. And when the freeman becomes irresponsible, he soon becomes a slave. Today the people of the United States are threatened by actual tyrannies from without and potential tyrannies from within. But neither of these menaces so seriously threatens our liberty as our own irresponsibility. Whenever we subordinate the general welfare to self-interest (which is the essence of social irresponsibility) we weaken another stone in the foundation of freedom."

EASY DOES IT

Do you sometimes wonder what combinations in table settings are most effective? Here are some settings which may serve as a guide for the table accessories you already have or may want.

With a pink cloth and napkins, you'll like white china with a pattern of violets or other small purple flowers. Use amethyst or violet goblets and, as a centerpiece, a low silver bowl of violets or asters.

Copper accessories are effective with turquoise earthenware dishes against a plaid linen cloth. Use emerald green hand-blown stemware.

RECIPE OF THE WEEK

Ice Cream Pie
(Serves 6)
2 tablespoons milk
1½ cups fine macaroon cookie crumbs
1 pint chocolate ice cream
1 pint strawberry ice cream
4 cup heavy cream, whipped
Mix milk with macaroon crumbs. Form shell in greased mixture over bottom and sides of 8-inch pie pan. Bake 10 minutes in a moderate (350°F.) oven. Cool. Chill about 15 minutes. Line shell with chocolate ice cream, then fill with strawberry ice cream. Decorate edge and center of pie with whipped cream.

Lots of yellow or orange flowers available for a centerpiece! Use them with a rust colored cloth and gray and brown pottery dishes. Goblets can be amber.

Here's a very smart modern setting: black and white printed cloth and undecorated white china in a simple modern design. Tumblers should be of cinnamon brown glass, or clear glass with emerald ball-foot.

Natural linen cloths look pretty with chocolate brown napkins. The dishes should match napkins, and glasses may be amethyst. A centerpiece of pink geraniums, asters or other rose-pink blooms are good.

WOMAN HATER

VIRGINIA W. STROBLE

GEORGIE was swinging on the gate near the creek and looking wistfully across the Iowa prairie. It was hard to be only five and have no part in the preparations his parents were making.

When he saw a chubby figure in pants and a dress, he dropped to the ground, and taking out his jackknife, cut a willow switch from the near-by thicket. He notched the stick at each end and went to the barn in search of a thong. The one he found was worn and greasy but when Emmy found him, he was attaching it to the willow stick.

"What-cha doin'?" she asked.

"Somethin' girls wouldn't understand."

"Looks like a bow to me. Got any arrows?"

"Not yet. Just starlin' to make 'em!" With his knife in hand, he cut the willow.

"I'll get the feathers," Emmy called after him.

As he cut his stick, George could hear the chickens squawking. When he returned to the barn, an excited hen ran between his legs, her tail feathers missing. Emmy displayed a fluster of feathers.

He accepted them without thanks, and in a tantalizing sing-song voice said, "I know somethin' you don't know."

Emmy rose to the bait. "What is it?"

"Wouldn't be a secret if I told."

"Please tell me," Emmy cried, all the while gained in six years experience.

"Promise you won't tell."

"I promise."

"I'm goin' away where I won't have to play with girls any more."

George continued to whistle as he enjoyed Emmy's surprise.

"Where you goin'?" Emmy asked, when she recovered herself.

"We're moving to Colorado. There's buffalo, Indians, and practically no women. Father says so."

Emmy was speechless and George pushed his advantage.

"That's why I'm making this bow and arrows—to fight Indians."

"Pooh! It's Indians that use bows and arrows. White men use guns."

Emmy had recovered her composure.

"This white man's going to use bows and arrows," George aimed off.

A PICK OF THE STARS

By LYN CONNELLY

THE REPORTEDLY TV deal between Bing Crosby and a top beverage company is expected to pop very soon. The Grosvenor will do a number of film telecasts as well as his weekly radio stint. Shape of things to come in TV, a manufacturer is planning a receiver that will project a 34-foot image onto a wall, screen, or window shade. Bob Hope's one-night stand abroad this summer will take him to Israel. Wally Cox gets his own show soon (as a summer replacement) in a situation-comedy affair titled "Mr. Peepers."

Perry Wood and the rest of the cast of "Kama" will appear in a stage play based on the video series this summer. Perry Come will play the role of a summer school teacher in a play. A good way to keep himself in personal contact with the public, Jerry Lester and NBC are fending off the comedian, who got the break of his lifetime from the network, is charging "breach of contract."

PLATTER CHATTER

CAPITOL: Carl Saxe and his Green Valley Boys make their debut with two stirring numbers, "Wrap My Body in Old Glory," backed by "God's Secret Weapon." Jimmy Bryant comes up with a good novelty in "Bryant's Shout" and "Fiddling Guitar." Gisele MacKenzie continues her good work with "It's So Easy to Satisfy" and a revival of "What'll I Do?"

COLUMBIA: This company has re-released Mildred Bailey's famous "Rockin' Chair," backing it with "Give Me Time." It's as top-notch now as when it was first played. Errol Garner continues the wave of revivals with two oldies splendidly played: "Music, Maestro, Please," and "Out of Nowhere." "Needle in a Needle" sounds gruesome but actually it's a tallor's serenade and Jimmy Boyd does well by it. "Little Train a-Chuggin' in My Heart" is on the flip side.

Three agricultural divisions of the University of Maine serve the people of the State. They are the college of Agriculture, the Agricultural Experiment Station, and the Extension Service.

THE LAW NOBODY WROTE

The Curry County Times, published at Clatsop, New Mexico, recently ran an editorial pointing to some of the tremendous and expensive administrative problems the price control regulations have imposed on business. At the end it said, "Somehow the threat of inflation and skyrocketing prices sort of fades in comparison with the more and finally maintained levels have precipitated."

"Anyhow, we haven't heard anything about the law of supply and demand being repealed. Until it is, we think it is pretty unlikely anyone to Washington can dream up something better."

Many wrote the law of supply and demand on legislation enacted it no longer leaves government people enforce it. It's just a law of nature and it has governed economies of the world since time began. Every effort to tamper with it or replace it with man-made economic law has created only confusion and in some cases, national disasters.

That law makes it certain that manufacturers will produce the things people want in the quantity wanted. It also makes it certain that our retail stores, from the smallest one-man shop to the largest national chain, will stock these articles and sell them at a price which is held to the lowest practical figure by free competition.

A little bit suspicious of "Gaspes"—intentionally, Anita Cyr throws a quizzical glance at the gannet which is a species of rare sea fowl that comes from Bonaventure Island off the Gaspes coast of Quebec which is annually visited by thousands of American tourists who are intrigued by the 40,000 gannets who call the island "home" during the summer months. "Gaspes"—a full grown gannet weighing seven pounds with a wing spread of 72 inches, was brought to New York from Bonaventure Island by Claude Melancon, noted Canadian naturalist and an official of the Canadian National Railways, and presented to the Bronx Zoo in behalf of the Quebec Zoological Society. Before taking up residence in the New York Zoo, "Gaspes" made a personal television appearance as the guest of Rex King of the Audubon Society.
